Depends /so / clarify/ mean /basically / exactly

Kathy: Hi Javier. How's it going ?

Javier: It's not easy, all this English. We didn't do any of this on my course.

Kathy: Can I help?

Javier: Well, maybe you could clarify a couple of things. Let's see. Here we are. Provision for income taxes. What does that mean?

Kathy: Ok. Provisions means putting money aside so that we have something to pay with later.

Basically/So provision for income taxes is talking about the current year's tax expense which will have to pay in the future.

Javier: Like provisional?

Kathy: Not exactly. Provisional just means temporary, you know, not final.

Like a provisional budget. It's not the final version.

Javier: I see. And what about deferred income tax balances. What does deferred mean?

Kathy: So put off to another day. The income has been recognized in the accounts, but the tax owing on that income will only be realized in the future.

Javier: Ok. How does that affect associated companies?

Kathy: Well, it depends. Associated companies and affiliates are a special case.

Deferred taxes are not normally recognized on undistributed earnings, but only if the plan is to re-invest the profits.

Javier: So if don't invest the profits, we pay tax.

Kathy: Exactly.

Student A: Hi! Can you help me with something?

Student B: Sure. What's the problem?

Student A: Could you clarify something for me? What does EXW mean?

Student B: Of course. EXW stands for Ex Works.

Student A: So, what does that mean exactly?

Student B: Basically, the seller makes the goods available at their premises. The buyer is responsible for collecting the goods and arranging the transport.

Student A: Does the seller pay for the transport?

Student B: Not exactly. The buyer pays for the transport and takes all the risks from the seller's premises.

Student A: I see. So the buyer is responsible for almost everything?

Student B: Exactly.

Student A: Thanks. That really helps.

Student B: You're welcome.
